Walkway project nears end

The T. Anne Cleary Walkway is undergoing major renovations to address ongoing maintenance concerns and improve accessibility.

By ALY BROWN

The T. Anne Cleary Walkway is undergoing renovation this summer after 15 years to address facility issues, and officials say the project is on schedule for completion by Aug. 10.

Jennifer Hoffman, a University of Iowa Facilities Management project manager, and Jennifer Hoffman, a University of Iowa Facilities Management project manager, said the main focus of the construction is to fix ongoing maintenance issues such as deteriorating brick lining the walkway and removing short posts that have made snow brick to maintain, and we need to reuse the brick that is there,” she said. “We are dealing with concrete that needs to be repaired and replacing where we need to.”

John Adam, Calacci Construction project manager, said the total estimated construction cost is $244,000, with $180,000 in concrete repairs and replacement and $55,000 for brick and landscaping.

Rastetter was unable to disclose the names of those universities, and Henry Akiona — AgriSol Tanzania’s director of communications — said they’re still in the working stages of partnering with those schools.

“The Iowa Citizens for Community Improvement filed an ethics complaint against Rastetter with the Iowa Ethics and Campaign Disclosure Board last month, maintaining there was a conflict of interest involving Iowa State University and AgriSol Energy Tanzania in the Tanzania arm of Iowa Farm AgriSol Energy Tanzania,” Rastetter said.

Crisis Center project moves ahead

The Johnson County Board of Supervisors discussed the contract for the 1105 Gilbert Court project Thursday.

By ANNA EGELAND

The Johnson County Crisis Center might have room for expansion soon.

The Johnson County Board of Supervisors on Thursday continued to discuss continuing the center’s acquisition of additional space at the now-vacant former site of the Johnson County Public Health Department, 1105 Gilbert Court.

The Public Health Department moved to 605 1st Dubuque St. in January 2009, leaving the old space empty.

Supervisors initially approached Cris- ce Center officials in August 2009 about the possibility of using the space if they wanted the location.

Rastetter, the executive director of the Crisis Center, said the center might not take on the project when initially approached, but the organization became serious about acquiring the space a year ago.

The Crisis Center — which serves approximately 18,000 clients annually — plans to share the building with other nonprofit organizations. Reedus said the board will be shared with the National Alliance on Mental Illness of Johnson County and the Domestic Violence Intervention Program.

The space at the now-vacant former site of the Crisis Center, said the center might not take on the project when initially approached, but the organization became serious about acquiring the space a year ago.

At the meeting Thursday, Reedus said the collaboration made the project possible.

“I would like that to remain in case something came up and you wanted to use it … It doesn’t mean you’d ever have to use it, but at least you’d have it in there in case,” she said.

Supervisor Rod Sullivan said he thought the contract seemed reasonable.

“Essentially to me, (the Crisis Cen- ter) is the one that’s been accepting the risk,” he said.

University of Iowa alum Steve Sherman said he will run against opponent Sallie Stutsman on a platform focused on lowering taxes and lessening regulation.

By NICHOLAS MILLER

Although Steve Sherman did not intend on becoming a career politician, he is running for his third term in office.

The Iowa City Republican

National Committee Victory Office held a phone-bank event Thursday in Coralville for Sherman, the Republican candidate in Iowa House District 37.

“I don’t feel like I’m running on a platform of lowering taxes, lowering regulations, and improving the business environment,” he said. “Across the board, I am kind of doing that,” he said.

Sherman graduated from the UT in 1992 and has served on the university’s alumni board.

“I thoroughly enjoyed my time there,” he said. “It’s a great town. The University helped prepare me for life. But I’m not set to be a politician.”

Sherman did not attend the rally event brought in more than 20 Sherman supporters from other friends, neighbors, and fellow Republicans.

Sherman is running on the same ticket as the Iowa City Republican

Sherman was elected to the Johnson County Supervisors seat since he served in the position from 1998. As a county supervisor, Sherman plans to manage the estranged budget effectively, redefine services and support the local community and market products of Iowa.

In a campaign video, Sherman offers help and his family’s “more than 40 years of agricultural experience as long-term members of the Iowa Farm Bureau.”

Sherman also comes from rural roots. He grew up on his family’s Century Farm near Oriental. He has lived with wife Amy on North Liberty for 18 years, and they have four children.

Shawn demonstrated up support for Sherman by calling district residents and conducting a brief survey on national and local politics.

Sherman said he expects to continue a community that allows for new businesses and gives them the opportunities.

“I would really like to do what I can to make people stay here,” he said.

The belief government spending is spent too fast, and it should be focused on issues that really need it.

Prosecutors dismiss lesser charge in homicide case

The prosecutor dismissed the aggravated assault charge against Brian Ferro, an Iowa City man convicted of beating a man to death.

Prosecutors said they decided to charge Ferro with a lesser charge.

Ferro, 29, has been accused of beating a man to death.

Ferro, 28, was arrested on April 25 after a man was beaten to death in a park.

Police said Ferro had been drinking and had been involved in several incidents involving violence.

Ferro was charged with second-degree murder.

Ferro pleaded no contest and was sentenced to seven years in prison.

The University of Iowa announced Thursday that Debra Schwinn will become the Carver College of Medicine’s new dean on Aug. 10.

Schwinn, an accomplished medical researcher, will replace former Rawlings-Miller professor of Pharmacology and Anesthesiology, and adjunct professor of Neurology at the Hospital of the University School of Medicine and director of the Institute of Medicine of the University of Iowa.

The UI conducted the search for the position.

The UI Libraries also gave the use of some of its photos for the mural. UI Libraries archivist who worked with Wells Fargo, said he was approached in April 2011 for photos of Iowa City through the years that would fit the theme of the mural, which used to be Capitol Bar.

Alberhasky said the mural brings up long forgotten tales of Iowa City’s history.

Rastetter unsure on complaint

The Iowa Citizens for Community Improvement are calling for Rastetter’s resignation from the state Board of Regents.

“I want Iowans to know the good, the bad and the ugly,” said Rastetter, the cofounder of AgriSol, an Iowa non-profit that runs an educational project for seven years in Tanzania that is responsible in part for human rights abuses against refugees in Tanzania.

The national consumer advocacy nonprofit organization Food & Water Watch announced Wednesday that it would join the Iowa Community Improvement’s ethics complaint against Rastetter.

Rastetter has betrayed the trust of the people he is supposed to be serving on the Board of Regents and has severely compromised the credibility of Iowa State University, Food & Water Watch’s executive director said in a press release.

The local group also released a report with the Oakland Institute that detailed human rights violations against human rights and refugees in Tanzania.

“We need to make sure that we re-engage Iowans everywhere and understand the value of the three universities, and not just those that are made from here,” he said.

“Would it have been better for the project had I not become a regent?” Rastetter said. “You know, we can speculate and debate on that … and maybe they still would have been.”

"We analyze it afterwards by reliving each ride on the computer," Kearney said. "We’ll also create computer programs to identify where you were in the simulation and extract information out of it."

Ed Bryant, a civil engineer for the Florida Department of Transportation who was in Iowa to participate in RAGBRAI, said though he’s had a lot of experience working with bicycle safety as well as studying various topics on the issue, he’s never seen something such as this.

“I’ve never been to Iowa before, and I’ve always wondered if there was any emphasis that cycling is more than a recreational activity, especially with having such a nationally known event like RAGBRAI,” he said. “But I’ve never seen anything quite like this.”

The department is in the process of putting the finishing touches on a second bike simulator, due to be ready for operation next month. The second bicycle will allow riders to ride with one another, giving the department another variable for the study. Each participant will witness an avatar of their counterpart on the screen riding next to them during the experience.

“It’s going to be a real giant step forward for us,” Kearney said. “It will have bigger screens and projectors, and overall, the technology with it is much more advanced.”

UI Professor of computer science Jim Cremer said that once the dual riding experience becomes possible, more aspects of rider safety will be available to dissect.

“Like in an online multiplayer game, you’re controlling some version of yourself with team members. But instead using a joystick, you’re using the bike,” Cremer said. “We could see if people will turn their head to talk to someone they’re riding with and how it affects their behavior.”

The original simulator is in its 10th year of operation, but Kearney feels that it works just as if it was brand-new. He said that, even with its age, it continues to serve its purpose of teaching people about riding safely.

“We’ve changed a lot since it began because technology has obviously advanced over the past decade,” Kearney said. “We just hope that what we learn will eventually reduce injuries among children.”

“Olympics was my first that I can remember, and that was such a big thing to see all the countries come together and participate in sport. These kids are at the prime age to get excited about the Olympics.”

The action continued with races. There was a three-legged race and the screaming race, in which the kids ran as far as they could in one scream, and the suitcase race, in which the kids dressed up in the provided outfit, ran to the other side, and undressed and gave the clothes to the next in line. If anything, these feats were much more difficult than those in the Olympics.

“This is the only chance we get to bring all three neighborhoods together. Sometimes they will run into each other in the community, but the neighborhoods are far from each other,” said Shanya Ihraez, the head of Breckenridge. “I believe that kids always should be exposed to opportunities to build good self-confidence, group interactions, and social dynamics. This is a natural way of doing it.”

The KASH Alexander basketball clinic was originally planned to take place in May or July. She decided to have it today to allow more girls to attend. The changes and all the planning has not gotten to Alexander — it might be stressful for her mother, but it will be fun for her, she said.

Alexander was a key player for the Iowa women’s team and is an alternate route, the roster and are faced on the roster and are faced moment’s notice. Everyone has the ability to jump so when I’m called in I can stick around here for a great franchise. I’ve also gotten some good experience by getting to know their coaches and front-office staff, and I’ve met some of the different guys on the team. There are a bunch of scouts here at the games, and it’s such a privilege to be around this league. Hopefully, I can stick around here for the summer.

Gatens: Moving without the ball, finding spots to get open, and creating your own shot. Those are the three big things, and they’re the most important aspects in my ability to play at this level. The end, the challenge is trying to stay with the pick-and-roll and keep up with such good players.

Gatens: At Iowa, you were the star of the basketball program but now you’re one of the guys at the bottom of the totem pole. How have you handled the change in roles?

Gatens: I’m really excited for my coach and run the camp. Overseas, Nikol Soulis, will help me. It might be stressful to be a key player — that’s her love,” said the assistant coach on Monday where I thought I did a nice job on both ends, as the key is to play hard every second and hit some open jumpers if they’re available.
