VOTE 2012: JUSTICE CENTER

Not all favor justice center

By NATHANIEL O'JEN

Although no one spoke out publicly against the proposed Johnson County justice center at a forum Monday, the proposal for the $46.1 million center remains a contested issue.

The Obama tour backed early voting

By ERIC CLARK

More people are voting earlier this election year in Johnson County, and Obama for America officials remain vigilant about early voting in Johnson County as the state is one of the battleground states in the country.

Johnson County is one of the epicenters of early voting in the state, and Obama for America has been running voter registration drives in the county throughout the election season.

The Obama field office on E 15th Street is a hub for early voting in the county, with volunteers staffing the office daily to help people register to vote and cast their ballots.

In 2016, Obama for America had a strong presence in the county, with volunteers running phone banks and door-to-door canvassing to get out the vote.

In 2018, the campaign scaled back its operations in the county, but remained active in other parts of the state.

On October 30, 2018, the last day of early voting in Johnson County, the Obama field office was bustling with activity as volunteers worked from morning to night to help people register and vote.

On election day, November 6, 2018, Obama for America ran a full-field operation in the county, with volunteers staffing polling places and working on get-out-the-vote efforts.

The Obama campaign was able to maintain its strong presence in the county due to the hard work of its volunteers and the dedicated support of the Obama for America field office.

The Obama campaign was able to attract a diverse group of volunteers from across the state to help get out the vote in the county.

The Obama campaign was able to mobilize a large number of volunteers to help register voters and get people to the polls.

The Obama campaign was able to overcome the challenges of early voting in the county and maintain a strong presence throughout the campaign.

Don't politicize Iowa judges

Institute brings China to Iowa

UI Confucius Institute donates Chinese media to local libraries.

By CASSIDY BILEY

Books printed in English and Chinese are even to make an appearance on the shelves of local libraries, including the Iowa City Public Library, which received its donation last week.

The University of Iowa Confucius Institute began its Chinese Book Exhibition project earlier this year. The institute has hosted different lectures, festivals, and workshops throughout the year to educate the public on different aspects of China and Chinese culture. As part of this project, officials have collected and accepted donations of hundreds of books, CDs, DVDs, and games printed in English and Chinese to donate to local libraries and schools.

Erin Mullins, a program coordinator for the UI Confucius Institute, said the group received $30,000 from an organization seeking to fund the institute's cultural program coordinator. Erin Mullins, the program coordinator for the Confucius Institute at the University of Iowa, said the group received $30,000 from the Chinese National Office for Education through its Chinese Book Donation Project.

"We're just trying to get as much information out to the public as possible," Mullins said. "And I think that public libraries are one of the best places for people to access this material.

A handful of local libraries and schools have accepted donations, including the Iowa City Public Library, William J. miniature Branch, and St. Ambrose University.

According to the U.S. Census Bureau, 5.4 percent of the Johnson County population is of Asian ethnicity. A total of 127,377 Chinese students attended preschool in the U.S. in 2011. Xi Ma, curriculum coordinator at the Confucius Institute, said she helped in the selection process of the materials, and she believes this project will be very beneficial to the community.

"There is as limited material (community members) can have to learn about China," Ma said. "There is a need out there. People are curious about China.

Ma said this is why most of the materials are printed in English or in both Chinese and English. The main audience for the donations are Americans with a curiosity about China, therefore it is considered important.

Books are collected on site, collection services coordinator for the Confucius Institute, said officials are very excited to have accepted the donation.

"Our mission is to share information about the Confucius Institute," Shadyt said. "We think this library when accepts donations from different organisations and they are glad to do it in order to get the information out there. The library already has a collection of books about different languages and printed in different languages, so the donation will fit nicely.

Jean Hussey, a faculty member who teaches Chinese in the Wellman Elementary School of the Mid-Prairie School District, said she received a donation and was excited for many children's books, games and art- educational books available for her to use.

The school began teaching Chinese six years ago, when it received a federal grant. But since then, the federal money has run out, and Hussey said she needs new materials.

Each donated collection contains materials for children and adults. After taking materials' belongings, the elementary school took the rest of the material to the Wellman Public Library on Monday.

"We have a very small multilingual collection, so we are able to add to the collection to be available to the community," Anne E. Black, director of the Iowa City Public Library, said.

The state of the collection services coordinator for the Confucius Institute, said officials are very excited to have accepted the donation.

"The Confucius Institute is a wonderful addition to the library," Hussey said. "I think it’s going to be a wonderful addition to the library.

Images of cities from San Antonio to Portland flashed across the screen as residents of Iowa City viewed the draft plan for downtown and Riverfront Crossings during an open house Monday evening. Iowa City and Johnson County officials are trying to "align and enhance" land use in the area.

"Our plan is to preserve as many historic buildings as possible," said Doug Bauman, vice president of community planning and urban design at HBA, a firm that consulted on the plan. "So we try to come up with key framework, and idea that work anywhere.

The draft plan included proposals such as an art district in the Gilbert Street area, a green corridor connecting downtown Iowa City with a previously prepared park site at the site of the wastewater treatment plant, and a focus on better using the Iowa River and relation Creek.

"It's kind of turning a corner on this plan, and our goal is to make it as user-friendly as possible," senior city planner Jennifer Skaden said after the meeting.

Iowa City residents and business owners were asked to review the plan and bringing their suggestions for completion.

"It's the initial public meeting," she said. "We're looking for feedback and comments, because there's a lot of interest in this project and lot of current buildings." She mentioned the plan being presented Thursday at City Hall.

"We are trying to capture people, and we want to show you what it could be but it doesn't have to be," Jeff Davidsen, the director Iowa City's Planning and Zoning Commission, but planners stresses the flexibility of the plan, stating nothing was final.
