It is legal to fire a person for being gay, lesbian, bisexual, or transgender in 29 states in America. However, a continuous effort to change this by Congress may soon pay off.

The Senate is set to vote early next week on the Employment Nondiscrimination Act, which would prevent discrimination in the workplace based on sexual orientation or gender identity.

While 21 states, including Iowa, have protective laws of their own, Donna Red Wing of One Iowa—a state LGBTQ antidiscrimination Act, which would prevent discrimination in the workplace based on sexual orientation or gender identity.
MECCA releases local report

Report from MECCA brings up several possible concerns for the future.

By ROBERT W. SCHRADER, Staff Writer

One local organization is working to fight the increasing tide of substance abuse.

According to MECCCL's report, released this fall, more people suffer from drug addiction each year. Letter are actively and volunteer soliciting help. In fact, MECCA CEO Bob Berg said the majority of clients were not coming to participate in treatment by court.

According to a report made at the Johnson County Board of Reservior meeting on Thursday, the MECCA, The Mid-Eastern Council on Chemical Abuse--affiliates of MECCA visions in the state are in the past year.

50 of those clients, 151 were in residential treatment, 1,562 were in outpatient treatment. 34 percent of clients were apprehended in the marijuana, diversion programs. MECCA also provides 24-hour phone and email counteling, including in-person counseling.

Berg said in 2010, it had more than 6,000 calls and more than 100 emails. Berg said that the "Marriage and Recovery Program, which was only recently instituted, helps clients make better decisions in their lives. The "Program is not proselytizing" he added that "it just made sense to me, they might choose.

The Johnson County Supervisor of Community Affairs (SAA) is also on the most recent issue in Johnson County.

The SAA said that MECCA was a valuable resource for improving the county.

"Assuming that things go as planned," Berg said, "the County could eventually be at a great disadvantage. If we do not provide the services, the general public will continue to suffer."

The SAA said that the program was a valuable resource for the county.

"The biggest concern is having space for inpatient care," he said, "we will need more space in the future. We need more funding for inpatient care.

"We have more than half of the inpatient care," Berg said, "we have more than half of the inpatient care."
The first time students from Tate High school walked through the doors of Title Boxing Club, they were dressed in jeans and boots and not more than a little confused.

Now, after two months, they proudly show boxing gloves and wrap their flabby biceps over their shoulders as they briskly walk from the short trek to the club’s entrance.

Since early September, Title Boxing Club, 1004 Sycamore St. and Tate High have worked to pro-

Tuesday, Iowa City voters will decide the future of the 21-ordinance, a rule adopted in 2010 which banned alcohol sale in Iowa City on all but four blocks within the city. The ordinance is supposed to address issues of binge drinking, but many question its effectiveness.

According to the editor and board members of The Daily Iowan and the Iowa City Press-Citizen, the ordinance does not effectively address binge drinking. The ordinance was implemented in response to alcohol-related problems in Iowa City, such as public drunkenness and ambulance trips as evidence that students have merely moved from one party to another.

While those would be a violation of their rights. We agree that the drink- ing law — the music venue exception most notably. It is by no means draconian. In fall 2012, the lat-

One of the many crises to which the UI’s Coalition Against Domestic Violence is exposed daily is sexual assault. While there have been great strides in legal recogni-ce and funding for survivors of domestic violence, there is still a long way to go.

The Coalition has worked to prevent the occurrence of domestic violence by raising awareness of the problem and encouraging survivors to seek help.

According to the National Coalition Against Domestic Violence, one in four women and one in seven men experience domestic violence in their lifetime.

The Coalition is part of a nation-wide network of organizations working to end domestic violence and to provide support and resources for survivors.

The Coalition is committed to preventing and ending domestic violence, and to ensuring that all survivors have access to the support and resources they need to rebuild their lives.

The Coalition is dedicated to working towards a world free from violence and abuse.

One of the Coalition’s key priorities is to reduce the occurrence of domestic violence by increasing public awareness and by advocating for policy changes.

The Coalition is also committed to supporting survivors by providing them with information and resources, and by connecting them with local organizations that can provide additional support.

The Coalition believes that everyone has the right to live free from violence and abuse, and that it is everyone’s responsibility to work towards ending domestic violence.

The Coalition is proud of the progress that has been made in recent years, but there is still much work to be done.

The Coalition will continue to work towards ending domestic violence and to ensure that all survivors have access to the support and resources they need to rebuild their lives.

Thank you for your support and for working towards a world free from violence and abuse.

Sincerely,

The Coalition Against Domestic Violence.

Field hockey vies for high tournament seeding

Iowa will face off against Michigan State on Saturday at Grant Field.

By Danny Payne

Iowa’s matchup with Michigan State on Saturday at Grant Field is going to be a very big one. Perhaps the most important one for the No. 18 Hawkeyes this year.

Why? The Spartans are currently in third place in the Big Ten conference, one game ahead of the Hawkeyes. Because this is the final regular season game for both teams, it has strong implications for seeding in the Big Ten Tournament, which will be held in Iowa City the next weekend.

Depending on the results of their respective games on Saturday, there is a chance that Iowa could end the season in second place in the league and Michigan State in third. Such a switching of places among the top three teams would almost certainly benefit the Hawkeyes.

The Hawkeyes count on a few key players to step up and make the most of the opportunities that will likely present themselves in the Big Ten Tournament. These include senior forwards JoeNumberOfGames, Hoke, and Gage, as well as senior defense

For the Hawkeyes, the key to the game will be getting off to a strong start and setting the tone for the rest of the game.

The Hawkeyes have had a strong first half of the season, but they will need to carry that momentum into the second half of the season if they hope to make a run at the conference title.

The team will face a tough challenge in Michigan State, but with a strong performance, they can emerge victorious and secure a spot in the Big Ten Tournament.

The Hawkeyes have been playing well as of late, but they will need to play their best game of the season to have a chance at winning.

Iowa will need to play with intensity and focus, and make sure they are not overconfident against a formidable opponent.

The Hawkeyes have a strong track record of success against the Spartans, and they will need to continue that success if they hope to win on Saturday.

This game is a must-win for Iowa, and they will need to play their best to come out on top.

Iowa will need to play with passion and determination, and not let their focus waver.

The Hawkeyes have a strong team and a solid coaching staff, and they will need to use that to their advantage.

Iowa will need to play with confidence and execute their game plan, and not let the Spartans get the upper hand.

It’s no secret this year’s Hawkeye squad is one with higher expectations than any Iowa team in recent memory. With possibly 13 regular contributors to the rotation, the Black and Gold may be the deepest team in the conference. The usual suspects — Melsahn Bartels, Mike Gesell, Anthony Clemmons and Roy Devyncebroski — are all back along with the team’s top two scorers from last season, and she tallied 217 assists and averaged 9.4 points per game. Logic has been a starter since her freshman season and has now become one of the team’s leaders along with redshirt senior Theairra Taylor. "When Logic is a 1st-point guard, head coach Lisa Bluder said the report Logic to pick up some of the team’s scoring needs, particularly from beyond the arc, which worked on heavily during the off-season. "Without a doubt, we are going to ask her to score more than she has in the past," Bluder said. "She very underestimated that I love a scoring point guard. She is willing to play that role as well." — by Kent Cabel

College basketball season is here, and The Daily Iowan has full coverage with its 2013-14 basketball season preview. Coverage includes an in-depth analysis of key statistics from last season, the DI’s starting five, full men and women’s rosters, and the team’s upcoming schedule.
The statistical revolution that swept through Major League Baseball over the past few decades didn’t have as great an effect on the sport of basketball at the professional level as in that of baseball. But in college basketball, a revolution is happening.

It has been reported that nearly 80 percent of NBA teams employ some form of advanced analysis to help scout opponents and analyze teams’ play using the most advanced and technologically advanced tools.

The current shift in innovation and data analysis has affected the college game, too, as coaches are using it for recruiting and for in-game decision-making.

As an example, ESPN.com investigated which NCAA basketball coaches are embracing advanced statistics and which coaches are shying away from statistical observations and in-game feel. Iowa men’s basketball Coach Fran McCaffery’s most prominent metric is points produced, which has been used successfully by McCaffery for several years in their program. McCaffery has stated that, while for this season in particular, it may be wise for McCaffery to take advantage of some of the advanced tools he has at his disposal.

With that being said, there are some significant statistics from Iowa’s 2012-13 season that may affect the upcoming campaign.

Points Produced — Roy Devyn Marble, 522

Author and statistician Dean Oliver developed this statistic as a way to measure a player’s contributions on the offensive end of the floor. Essentially, it allocates a number (value) to points contributed on made shots, assists, and offensive rebounds.

For example, an assist on a two-point basket earns a player 20 percent of the scoring possession, or 0.5 points.

For 3-pointers, the assisting player earns approximately 15 percent of the possession, which again works out to about 0.5 points produced.

The statistic is a good measure of teamwork, as scoring points that are not always scored just by one player making a shot. As a juncture, Marble was extremely efficient on the offensive end, despite going through several periods of inactivity and marked decreases in production.

During Iowa’s Big Ten Tournament game against Northwestern, Devyn Marble in points produced has all moved on or become different players, which makes the Statistical, McCaffery must prepare his team to lead the conference in this area in 2013-14.

Free Throws — 792 attempts in 2012-13 (12th in NCAA, 2nd in Big Ten)

Teams coached by McCaffery typically develop an attack mentality on the offensive end, and usually translates into a lot of trips to the free-throw line.

Indiana was the only Big Ten team to attempt more than 700 free throws this season, with 736 attempts.

Another year of experience and seasoning for frontcourt players Adam Woodbury, Melsahn Basabe, and Gabriel Olasoso should improve the Hawkeye’s offensive efficiency on the floor. And if improvements are made to the Iowa perimeter defense, the Black and Gold should find themselves near the top of the rebounding leaderboard once again this season.

Rebounds — 39.4 per game (7th in NCAA, 1st in Big Ten)

This number shows a huge improvement in Iowa’s overall defense and rebounding ability. The 39.4 rebounds per game is a full rebound improvement over the previous season, proving McCaffery’s intense defensive philosophy is causing opponents to take more ill-advised, low-percentageshoes.

Another year of experience and seasoning for frontcourt players Adam Woodbury, Melsahn Basabe, and Gabriel Olasoso should improve the Hawkeyes’ rebounding success in this area.

A look at the Big Ten power rankings, sorted by the number of points produced, show that Iowa’s starting center from a year ago was the most improved player on the team over the summer, and that’s a trait not often seen.

While this season’s Iowa women’s basketball team returns three starters and eight letter-winner from last season, this year’s team is far different than the team that advanced to the second round of the NCAA Tournament in March.

Points per game — Jaime Printy and Morgan Johnson, 27.5

This is undoubtedly the biggest question facing this season’s squad. With the graduation of Hawkeye greats Jaime Printy and Morgan Johnson, someone must fill the void.

The Hawkeyes will must rely on five players for the production. Don’t expect one player to take large leaps in any statistical category. Instead, expect everyone to improve incrementally.

Replacing 27 points per game is no easy task, but the Hawkeyes don’t seem to be worried. One player head coach Lisa Bluder said she expects to score more is point guard Sami Logic. Bluder said Logic has improved dramatically on her 3-point shot, which should help fill the scoring void.

Samantha Logic, guard

Melissa Dixon and Theairra Taylor will likely help in this area. Last season, Dixon came off the bench to average 10.1 points per game. With Dixon likely in the starting lineup this season, expect her point totals to increase. In Taylor’s case, the senior is now two years removed from her last ACL injury and feeling better than ever. This is good news for anyone who has seen Taylor play at full strength.

Assists last season — Sam Logic, 217 (1st in Big Ten)

Last season, Logic set the school record for total assists in a season — an average of 6.4 assists per game. This is Logic’s offensive and will be until she graduates. She is one of the reasons the Hawkeyes
