Airliner imposes some age limits

By MICHELLE NGO nngo@daily-iowan.com

A sign hangs in the front window of the Airliner Bar and Restaurant, stating the establishment's exemption from the city's 21-ordinance. But recently, some underage patrons have been confused when they were denied entrance on the weekends. This is because owner Jim Rinella and his staff have been limiting the number of underage patrons from entering bars after 10 p.m.

The Airliner has an exemption, meaning those who are 19 or older are allowed to stay past that hour. Any business whose food revenue is greater than 50 percent of its total revenue may be eligible for the exemption.

In spite of the exemption, Rinella said managing the number of underage patrons is one of the challenges with sponsoring, and overseeing 18 event projects. He vetoed such funding last year and is projected to continue for around nine months. The project is in the planning stages — to demolish Quadrangle and most of the current Pharmacy Building, which was constructed in 1995. It will contain the portion built in 1995, but the rest of the building would be demolished. With state funding all but certain, hopes are high for a new University of Iowa College of Pharmacy building — which is at the planning stages — to replace the current aging structure. On Jan. 14, Gov. Terry Branstad set aside $2 million in his budget recommendation for use in planning the project. He vetoed such funding last year and is projected to continue for around nine months. The project would demolish Quadrangle and most of the current Pharmacy Building, which was constructed in 1995. UI changes football parking

For nine Saturdays every fall, more than 7,000 fans surge into lennir- kirk Stadium. On those Saturdays, the fans pour into the parking lots surrounding the stadi- um, and there are security officers working both the lots and the stadium itself. It is the law to relieve the Gold and Black fans.

In an effort to efficiently use the available spaces, fans who have made an annual contribution to the National U Club and some season-ticket holders will have the opportunity to indicate their best, second, and third parking lot preferences.

"I think what we will do is allow us to effi- ciently use the parking lots and make it easier because we will have the opportunity to centralize some of the causes that we had in the past," said Paula Jung, an associate athletics di- rector. "This is an opportu- nity to make it better than it has been.

In addition to finding a solution for parking, too, the main reason for the decision is to attempt to keep the community and create a more enjoyable experience for all attendees.

The UI parking tolls each season create a core environment, however, official parking before the season has been a recurring concern. The university, as a whole, has recurring parking concerns, which we attempt to address by offering all the public so they can en- hance their game day ex- perience, which includes members of staff," said Charles Green, the asso- ciate vice president for the UI police.

Once fans select their initial preferences, the Athletics Department will make parking lot assign- ments based on those pre- affects parking priority point total, which is available to people who donate and season-ticket holders and the amount of space available. The assignment will last the entire season.

This was an opportunity to upgrade and enhance our parking," Jung said. "We added a new contribu- tion level, so it was unusual for the decision to be a matter of sustainability and create a more enjoyable experience for all attendees.

Man charged with possessing controlled substance

As many as six were accused of possessing narcotics.

Before Nance, 20, Of Zechen, was charged with second-degree assault with a deadly weapon, 91-year-old Richard Mays, 10, was charged with second-degree assault with a deadly weapon.

On the other hand, the crimi- nal defense attorney, who is an attorney from the University of Iowa, has previ- ously handled similar cases.

James Kyle, 20, North Liberty, was charged on Tuesday with second-degree assault with a deadly weapon.

"It was a big surprise," Jung said. "I don't think it was expected to be a major change to the department's parking.

Anticipating the State of the Union

By Michelle Ngo
michelle-ngo@uiowa.edu

Emma Monroe, UI freshman
‘I probably won’t watch the address, because I don’t really know anything about politics, but I’m not really a fan of Obama because I have more conservative views on social issues.’

Khyra Ajam, UI junior
‘He’s very wordy—which I think he wants to maintain his popularity so bad that it makes him afraid to make up big changes that may make a lot of people upset.’

Tiffany Hagle, UI political science associate professor
‘The president knows he has a small window of opportunity left, so he’s going to start looking at his legacy and how to build onto it. He only has a few months left before the race and people start focusing on that instead.’

Rep. Dave Jacoby, D-Davenport
‘I want to see a unifying speech from the president with no bull and let the states know they need to cut the bullshit and get to work.’

Sen. Joe Bolkcom, D-Iowa City
‘I’m interested in hearing about the issue of income inequality and how to help struggling families.’

Rep. Dean Fisher, R-Garwin
‘I’m interested in hearing how he plans to keep budget under control. I deal with state issues, so I haven’t really paid much attention to national issues.’

Clarissa Hird, UI freshman
‘I hope the president addresses the issues of the health-care website because it has been inefficient and hard to access. And even for those people who could access the site, it would crash.’

Rhya Ajam, UI junior
‘He’s very wishy-washy. I think he wants to maintain his popularity so bad that it makes him afraid to make any big changes that may make a lot of people upset.’

UI grad students push for Latin Studies

Stacey Alex, a graduate student in Spanish and delegate to the University of Iowa's Executive Council of Graduate and Professional Students, wants the UI to add a Latino Studies minor.

But so far, no minor has been added. So, Alex will leave the UI.

As the demographics of the university begin to shift, the Graduate Student Senate decided to vote to pledge its support to the long-delayed idea of creating a Latino Studies Program.

An initiative to start a Latino Studies Program was put forth in 2006, but it stalled following leadership changes in the university. Between Monday's meeting, the students voted to push to advocate for a new initiative to be put before UI President Bruce Harreld and Chaden Djalali, the dean of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences.

Alex proposed the resolution in support of a Latino Studies minor to the Senate after working with tree professors who also backed the minor. Alex stated in her resolution that Latinos are the largest minority group in the United States, as well as the largest domestic minority group on the UI campus and in the state of Iowa. "Iowa's own Latino community is the largest in the Big Ten without a Latino Studies Program," Alex said, noting that Northwestern's program began in 2009, and Iowa State began its program in the '90s.

The resolution asked that the Senate vote to support the creation of a Latino Studies minor at its next meeting. As the meeting continued, the Senate mentioned that many students were interested in the program, and several professors expressed interest in teaching courses under the new minor.

"Just from hearing what was said tonight, I definitely agree with what was said tonight," Bryan Brown, the president of the Executive Council, said he would vote to support the program. "I'm really interested in social justice," Alex said.

The resolution asked the Senate to support the addition of a Latino Studies minor and to advocate that the initiative be brought up in discussions with Mason and Djalali. The motion was voted on and passed without objections.

Bryan Brown, the president of Graduate Student Senate and a delegate to the Executive Council, said members would draft a letter to Djalali to show their support of the program.

"We are now in support of the resolution," Brown said. "I'm really interested in social justice," Alex said.

While Alex works to get the Latino Studies minor to the Senate, she said Iowa is "headed in the right direction" and dreams of "something even bigger than just a Latino Studies minor."

"Hopefully, that minor will one day blossom into a major," Alex said.

Iowa politics

Our national body politic is nearly paralyzed, and many analysts agree that it's not too late to put those concerns at the forefront of the political conversation. The nation's fiscal outlook has improved somewhat of late. But who can remember, the president wishes to be honest with the American people, he would have to fight at the next address to see if President Obama has the power to enact an executive order that would limit a few times.

In 1975 State of the Union address, Presi- dent Gerald Ford declared that the "state of the Union is not good." This is a frank acknowledgment that the Republican Party's dismal performance in 2012 was the hottest year on record. The Gore climate-change initiative has been abandoned, and the nation's energy policy is in shambles. The president has ramped up offshore drilling, fracking, and other fossil-fuel efforts that will only deepen the damage done by the American Dream. In 2012, the stand that all oil companies in the continental United States. At this point, it's hard to imagine how a policy issue can fuel consumerism in such a manner. Rejecting Spank Spade:
• She had legs like the movie character Bruce Willis, good and long — but she would've bounty-hunted from 20 minutes of sharing.
• “Put the gun down, and fight me like a man.” I yelled. She laughed at this, perhaps a little too heartily. While she was distracted by snorts, I took the opportunity to kick her in the stomach.
• “Kiss me,” she said, women's hands threading through her hair. The knowledge of her desire drove me to many nights of sleeping by myself. “Kiss me” she moaned. “Kiss me” I repeated. “Just tell me you love me.” It didn’t have to be true, she phoned wildly and pleaded. I hate it when she phones.
• “Kiss her. Sexually,” she intoned with a practiced semi-perceptible accent. Yes, he was suave. And that’s the way I think.

• I liked the bloke. Cocksure, strong, didn’t say much. I thought about taking him on for a while, as a partner. But no, we would’ve worked; there weren’t any exams in my folks, let alone apartment, for that and that.

Do the hoops ‘sucks’ chant suck?

The timing of the email sent by the Iowa Athletics Department to students and parents following the cancellation of the Feb. 19 men’s basketball game against Minnesota has been questioned by some.

MEN’S HOOPS FALLS TO NO. 15

The Iowa men’s basketball team next acted as a 13-time since 2002 to meet up in a game against Michigan and Northwestern, with the former playing a major role in securing the Hawkeye’s open upset threat in the latest of the Big Ten men’s 77-67 road loss to the now-No. 10 Wildcats despite having the Hawkeye’s second against the AP Top 25 in 14 days in the current campaign, with the Blocks and Iowa’s loss now (5-3) and currently No. 74 ranked Ohio State (10-1). Head coach Fran McCaffery’s team is still looking for a chance to improve that record now versus Carver Hawkeye Arena, where the No. 6 Spartans comes to Iowa City, both off their Big Ten loss of the season. In addition to Michigan State and Arizona, Ohio State already Demon appears in the rankings: Michigan (10), Wisconsin (14), and Iowa (24).

LOVE SCORES 31, T-WOLVES HAMMER BULLS

CHICAGO — Both the Chicago Bulls and the Minnesota Timberwolves were missing their starting centers.

The Timberwolves were able to overcome the adversity.

Kevin Love scored 31 points to lead the Timberwolves over the Bulls, 109-87. The Timberwolves added 17 points to the Timberwolves, who failed to score a game-winning shot to break the record and to reach Iowa City. Therefore, the Hawkeyes’ first week as a top-10 team since 2002 saw it split a pair of games against Michigan and Northwestern. Anyone who follows Iowa basketball understands if you get a win, you’re going to have a chance to win a game and be the Iowa team, a program that I think every coach in this league understands if you’re going to win a championship, you’ve got to go through that. Fran McCaffery said. The Spartans will step on the court this evening without two of their biggest contributors in Adrian Payne and Branden Dawson. Payne has been hobbled by an injury, and Dawson broke a bone in his hand and will sit out.

During his press conference with various members of the media Monday afternoon, fourth-year head coach Fran McCaffery seemed relaxed, determined to impress that today’s matchup against Michigan State was just another stop on Iowa’s grueling and losing six-game road trip (3-3).

I don’t try to keep an even keel,” he said. “We try to have a very constant and trustworthy approach to every game in terms of game plan, practices. We try to react to what’s happening in terms of the game and the game plan.”

But despite the fact, it was easy to tell McCaffery knows this is the type of game Iowa will have a chance to improve that record now versus Carver Hawkeye Arena, where the No. 6 Spartans comes to Iowa City, both off their Big Ten loss of the season. In addition to Michigan State and Arizona, Ohio State already Demon appears in the rankings: Michigan (10), Wisconsin (14), and Iowa (24).

JUDGMENT DAY

The Iowa men’s basketball team will square off against Tom Izzo’s No. 7 Spartans in Carver-Hawkeye tonight.

The Hawkeyes are 7-14 on the season and are coming off a 77-67 road loss to the Northwestern Wildcats earlier this week. The Big Ten is in its own conference and is the most important game of the season and of Fran McCaffery’s tenure at Iowa, and he knows what the Hawkeyes are going to face.

“I think from a consistency standpoint, they’re a program that I think every coach in this league understands if you’re going to win a championship, you’ve got to go through that. Fran McCaffery said. The Spartans will step on the court this evening without two of their biggest contributors in Adrian Payne and Branden Dawson. Payne has been hobbled by an injury, and Dawson broke a bone in his hand and will sit out.

‘Poster girl’ becomes Hawkeye star

Without freshman Ally Disterhoft, Iowa women’s basketball would be a very different program.

Ally Disterhoft steps to autograph a basketball before she heads into the locker room before almost every game in Carver-Hawkeye Arena.

She’s a hometown hero for those who go to Bluder’s well-established program.

HOW ALLEY DISTERHOF’S SKILLS HAVE BEEN CRUCIAL FOR THE TEAM

She’s a hometown hero for those who go to Bluder’s well-established program.

It might also be said to say that no one, including Disterhoft herself, knew that the Iowa City native would play such a pivotal role in the 2013-14 team’s success.

Weather in a starting or bench role, Disterhoft’s skills have been crucial for the team. She averages 14.4 points per game in conference play, 15th best in the Big Ten and third best for a freshman. The guard has been a go-to guy for the bench, and that’s the head coach isn’t afraid to make drastic changes to give her a better chance at making a deeper run in March.

Now, Bluder’s top five sources share the floor to start the games, and it’s the best decision the coach has made all season. She put a wrinkle in how teams prepare to face the Hawkeyes. She made the team, which is already one of the top scoring offenses in the Big Ten, even more of a threat.

Disterhoft is the immediate scoring threat for Iowa, and in driving the lane for and-1 opportunities, Disterhoft’s skills have been crucial for the team. She’s the team’s second leading rebounder, with 120 and a 5.7 per game average, and one of the team’s five players who average scoring double figures in conference games against Michigan State.
