RAMOS LEAPS ATOP WRESTLING WORLD

Iowa’s Tony Ramos earned the 133-pound NCAA title, capping a stellar career in a Black and Gold singlet.

OKLAHOMA CITY, Okla. — He’s wandering around the floor of the Chesapeake Arena, showing off his cheesy, toothless grin, signing countless autographs, and taking even more pictures. He loves doing this, of course, perhaps even more so on this particular Saturday night.

Tony Ramos earned the right to do this. He earned the right to race off the stage and jump into his family’s arms.

He earned that little black hat his older brother, Frankie Defilippis, gave him after he beat Wisconsin’s Tyler Graff, 3-1, in the first tiebreaker of the 133-pound NCAA title match.

He earned the moniker that was embroidered on that little black hat: “NCAA CHAMP” it reads, in big, gold letters.

Down underneath the Chesapeake Arena, after Ramos won, Tom Brands emerged from the locker room wearing that little black hat. He showcased a huge grin. One of his all-time favorite wrestlers just won a national title.

“I’ll tell you what, it feels good,” he said. “I kept saying he’s the king.”

It wasn’t easy. It couldn’t be easy. The expectations were too high, the weight of them too heavy, the task too difficult.

While Marina Zaloznaya grew up in Crimea, Ukraine, in the 1980s and ’90s, she practiced the Russian language, studied in Russian schools, and read Russian literature.

This dominant influence of the Russian culture is a primary reason — along with her Russian ethnicity — Zaloznaya understands the many reasons Crimeans want to leave the Ukraine to join Russia.

Crimea is a Ukrainian peninsula west of Russia. The region — roughly the same size as Massachusetts — is home to roughly 1.9 million people.

Students to aid UI on assaults

University of Iowa officials will choose roughly 12 students for a Sexual Assault Advisory Committee.

By DAVID SOHN

By the end of the academic year, student volunteers will be able to have a meaningful role in addressing sexual offenses at the University of Iowa under a new plan to create a Sexual Assault Advisory Committee.

UI President J. Bruce Harreld announced his plan last August and stated that it is the University’s best effort to date to provide support and services to victims of sexual assault.

Starting March 11, interested students will begin applying for the group. An online application process ended March 14, and 114 applications were received before the 55 spots were filled.

The committee will be tasked with recommending changes to the University’s various policies and the committee will be appointed by President Harreld.

More than 12 students on campus have been sexually assaulted in the past two years. One recent official estimate is that the number of reported cases is only a small portion of what occurs.

The committee plan is to select 12 students from the pool of applicants. The students will include both undergraduate and graduate students in order to create a diverse group that will best represent the University.

The committee will make recommendations to the University’s leaders on how to improve campus policies and prevent sexual assault on campus.

Students currently work to support victims as part of the Office of Student Rights and Responsibilities.

The goal is to create a system where students can report sexual assault and have the system respond in a way that supports their needs.

The plan would have a committee that will provide recommendations to the University’s leadership.

Efficiency over Opinions

I have to wonder what exactly “efficiency” means. The inner workings of a university will analyze how things could be improved and spend more money fixing issues of student safety and comfort. Those things are, no doubt, important enough, but it’s also important to prioritize student safety and comfort. It’s simply a matter of transportation. I’m no transportation expert, but I stand in front of the yellow line on the Line 1 route — Red, Blue, Inter- plane while assuming that overbooking seats on a plane while assuming that overbooking Search for storage for homeless fruitless

Iowa City officials are having a hard time finding a 24-hour storage solution for the belongings of the homeless.

By ISAAC HEPFNER

Iowa City officials have had no luck securing a private partner to service a 24-hour storage to house the belongings of the homeless.

The city reached out to 36 different nonprofit and faith-based organizations but did not receive any formal responses, said Geoff Fruin, the assistant to the city manager.

Trinity Episcopal Church was the only organization to express interest, however, it does not have adequate facilities to provide storage. Fruin wrote in an email.

"We want to get the buses out, and we want to get things going and want to get our people staffed, and then when the students get back, we’re ready to go."

— William Seals, associate director of the UI police

The coordinator of the Security Division of Public Safety, said the positions might become permanent.

"The big thing I heard from the drivers are you know the people that are taking part of the program they appreciate seeing the same face every night," Fruin said.

"They got to know people, there’s conversation, there’s dialogue, and so it’s a better experience."

With the second vehicle, Fruin said he would also like to employ more students to help cut costs.

"The central dispatcher is great and I’m going to send the info, but unless you have a person that’s sitting in there is going to help keep track of the number of people getting on the bus, will still kind of line up the destinations where they’re going as we can get things routed out better instead of the driver still having to do all that," Fruin said.

Georgina Dodge, the UI chief diversity officer and associate vice president, said the increased number of reports of sexual assault to the university were alarming, but the community has to be informed.

In addition, Dodge said more dialogue is trying to be exchanged between students and UI officials.

"The increase of sexual assault reporting is intended to increase safety, and that’s the same purpose of dou­bling the capacity for Nite Ride, so I think it’s just going to act very favorably," Dodge said. "Everyone has wanted more com­munication and more transparency, and we’re trying to meet that need."

fans expected Ramos to run through the field at 133 pounds. They figured he wouldn’t lose a match, that he would pin more people than he did during the 2012-13 season. They thought he’d take the title with relative ease.

But it wasn’t that easy. Ramos hiccupped twice before the 2014 calendar year and dropped to third in the rankings. With two losses, the road got tough for him. He would have to earn his way.

And so he did, rattling off 18-straight wins en route to securing both the Big Ten and NCAA titles. His last seven victories were all by decision, winning by an average of just 2 points. The matches were tough, but he earned every victory.

In the NCAA Tournament alone, Ramos came from behind to win his last two matches. In the semifinals, down 1-0 against Schopp, Ramos found a way to pin Schopp on his back, scoring a 5-3 decision. He had earned his spot in the finals.

And in the finals, tied at 1 with Graff in the first round, Ramos again found a way. Graff decided to roll, and Ramos made him pay. It wasn’t really a tilt, in the traditional sense, but it was enough for a two-count from the ref.

“That’s why you don’t roll,” he said afterward.

“Solid wrestling always wins,” Ramos earned those 2 points. He earned that victory.

There’s a story behind that hat. Delillipps actually had them made last year. He truly believed Ramos was going to beat Ohio State’s Logan Stieber for the 2013 national title — and for a moment in the second period, he nearly did. But Stieber won that match, 7-4. Delillipps said he took the hats back home and stored them in a closet. They would have to wait for a different ending, one Ramos would have to earn.

The storybook ending for the fan-favorite Hawkeyes involved a wrestled executed tilt and jumping into the arms of his family and wearing a hat that waited a year to be worn. It is a different way for a story to end, sure, but not all endings are happy ones. “I won the national title,” Ramos said. “I get the job done. That’s all that matters right now.”

The Hawkeyes dropped a close one to the Fighting Illini on Saturday at the Hughes Tennis Center. The Illini won 7-6 in a tiebreaker over the Badgers. With the loss, Iowa drops to 9-4 in doubles action, 7-6 in singles, and 1-6 in overall matches, with Hagan having the sole edge over the Badgers.

The day began head coach Marla Looper saying in a release, “I am proud of them for getting their first round game of the NCAA Tournament. Iowa women’s basketball team came out strong in their first opening Big Ten series. After a devastating loss in the Big Ten Tournament championship, home court advantage helped the Iowa women’s basketball team out strong against Nebraska. They didn’t want to let the 2013-14 season end, and they played like it in their 87-65 defeat of Marist in the first opening Big Ten series.”

The series win was the first Big Ten opening series win for Iowa since 2009. “I was really proud of our guys, we came out and battled,” head coach Rick Heller said. “I was really pleased with how our guys showed a lot of mental toughness, as did their guys. All those games were well-played games in about as bad of conditions as you can play in.”

For the second-straight season, on the heels of its 87-65 win over Marist, the Iowa women's basketball team will advance to the second round of the NCAA Tournament. And just like last season, one of the host teams in the nation awaits the Hawkeyes.

The Iowa baseball team exceeded expectations in the nonconference portion of its schedule. However, people were hesitant to get excited until the Hawks duplicated that success against Big Ten opponents.

Iowa got off to a good start in that aspect on Sunday, when they defeated Nebraska 8, 6-4, taking the series by winning two of the three games. The series win was the first Big Ten opening series win for Iowa since 1998. “I was really proud of our guys, we came out and battled,” head coach Rick Heller said. “I was really pleased with how our guys showed a lot of mental toughness, as did their guys.
