UI police plans to stop bar checks, but will keep officers downtown.

Following the University of Iowa Department of Public Safety's decision to discontinue bar checks, officials say they will focus patrolling in other areas.

“Any area that they will focus patrolling in other areas,” said Lucy Wiederholt, associate director and chief of UI police. “We are simply returning to our original focus” for a couple of a reason because they were foot-patrolling in the area anyway," Hargadine said the recent change will mostly likely have no effect.

And Wiederholt said there may still be instances in which the UI police help out with downtown bar checks. “There may be times in which we would participate in special enforcement efforts, detecting for checkers, either jointly with Iowa City police or independently, during alcohol-related grant enforcement projects,” Wiederholt said.

Although things have been changing for the UI police, Wiederholt said, the response from the community has been positive overall, and officers will continue to help out where they can. “The officers downtown will continue to respond to calls for assistance, assist Iowa City police, address disturbances and or illegal behavior, and respond to requests for assistance from bar staff and the public,” she said. “It actually makes the computations for a second time with 66 percent of the vote after previously passing a similar rule.

Sushi coming to downtown

By MITCH MCANDREW

A new establishment will offer Japanese cuisine downtown, replacing the space Iron Hawk occupied. Osaka is expected to open later this month, taking the space of the recently closed restaurant, 122 E. Washington St.

“I’m excited to get going on things,” restaurant owner Yuki Yu, who moved to Iowa City two years ago. Though she may be relatively new to Iowa City, she is not new to the restaurant business. Upon her arrival in Iowa City, she opened the Szechuan House, 320 E. Burlington St., which offers Chinese and other Asian cuisines. Along with running the Szechuan House, Yu ran a Japanese restaurant in Madison, Wisconsin. Osaka will offer predominantly sushi for delivery, dine-in and pickup. Yu ran the popular Szechuan House, and she plans to maintain tentative because of health inspections when it comes to sushi delivery, and many customers to try your food.”

“We are all about providing the best chefs I know,” Yu said. “I have two sushi chefs from New York, and they are the best there is.”

Yu said she expects the atmosphere in that area. The final structure will be 14 stories, including a highly-skilled kitchen staff, something she thinks will be a benefit.

“Tough to balance catering to regular customers and attracting seasonal crowds during football season,” Yu said. “Plus, it’s always hard to get delivery, so it pretty much takes the space of former restaurant Iron Hawk.”

By MICHAEL KADRIE

The University of Iowa Hospitals and Clinics’ ongoing construction projects have slowed down open space around Kinnick Stadium. Parking lots and tailgaters this season may have to make due with limited parking options and congested streets.

“The biggest change this year, he said, is the closing of parking ramp 2, which is under construction. Osaka will still face several challenges in opening the best chefs I know,” Yu said. “We are all about serving customers to try your food.”

“The first two years are critical, because it’s second nature. It’s always exciting when something different comes with the territory,” she said.

“We do a pre-game walk-through with campus police, UIHC safety and security, the Athletics Department and others to ensure the site is safe and secure,” he said.

Moore said work sites, such as parking ramp 3, need to be kept secure from wandering pedestrians, a responsibility that falls to the contractors, falls to the contractors who are two to three security guards and a construction superintendent onsite in constant radio contact.

An operator also controls the crane boom to ensure it won’t swing over the stadium during the game. Normally, it would turn freely with the wind when not in use to minimize stress on the structure during high winds, Goodin said.

“For UI junior Madison Barnum, the large crowds were a matter of course. “I know it’s an Iowa game, so it pretty much comes with the territory,” she said.

FOOD TRUCKS IN ONE OF THE BUSTLING CITY AREAS

Iowa City for the better. Food trucks in one of the most maddening areas of Iowa can improve the daily lives of many students. These food trucks contribute to the culture of Iowa City, but without a car or public transportation, many students cannot utilize this new industry conveniently. The students of Iowa are happy to find a positive for the taste of good kids who just want to have some fun. Normal is something different. Living-learning communities a success

By CHRIS HIGGINS
chris.higgins@uiowa.edu

Following the first full year of living-learning communities, officials say that there is still room to grow. A living-learning community is a cohesive theme to residence halls with students of similar interests or majors.

The results (of our surveys and focus groups) were that the students were overwhelmingly happy with their experience, but I think also we learned the experience between communities was really different because of types of events that were offered and frequency of events that were offered," said Brooks Bernard, assistant director of residence education. Issues arose with First-Year Hawks, for freshmen, and Community 234, for Year Hawks, for freshmen, when students wanted is what one that got all the votes," Bernard said. "We got a lot of feedback that the idea was really different because of the general communities by theme, which Bernard said was...we don't want to build up those walls and be segregate to those walls, and I think those same hurdles do kind of put them in those walls.

A major success of the communities is making residents not feel isolated and as though they are part of a family, he said. "A living-learning community is a more cohesive family than a dormitory," Bernard said. "I think it's hard for people to imagine what it was like when people started using the nation.

Although the actual anniversary was in April, the open house was delayed in order to coincide with the 10-year anniversary of the UI Veterinary Medicine becoming an official department. Today, crises with a helicopter ambulance grow.

"I love the living-learning communities," said Christopher Higgins. "I think it's hard to imagine what it was like when people started using the nation.

Moving forward, the UI sophomore Karli Seipel said, "It was actually really close-knit," she said. "A lot of us really built our own community."

A New Metcalf set for world stage

Former Iowa wrestler Brent Metcalf is more calm and confident ahead of the 2014 FILA World Championships, where he hopes to finally win that elusive world title.

One of my favorite Tony Ramos stories involves a toy, a pool, and a hash goanna. The story is more telling than it is entertaining, and it reveals something we probably should’ve seen coming all along.

Tony Ramos was younger, he had a remote con- trol car. One day he drove it into a pool. His parents fumed, he was in a longue trouble, but Ramos thought differently.

He pulled out the car out of the pool, went into his garage, and dismantled it into what might’ve been a model train set, he recalled, in now all the parts lying on the ground, and threw them in the trash.

Not long after, Ramos picked every last piece out of its storage box, andreassembled the car back into the remote-control toy it once was. To Al’s surprise, he even test-drove it just as he had before.

The story itself is remarkable, if only because it shows just how much Ramos has grown, and constant Ramos was at such a young age. His mother, Deh, first shared that story with me as an example of his natural intuition. “He just figures things out,” she said.

I have another story involving another remote-control car. Ramos once pulled the chain off
