UI reconstruction stays local

The construction boom related to the 2008 flooding has opened up doors for more distant, possible out-of-state contractors to be more competitive with local workers, but Iowa companies still remain in the majority.

Such massive demolition, restoration, and rebuilding projects created a surplus of work for construction companies around Iowa, said Rod Lehnerz, the director of planning, design, and construction at the University of Iowa Facilities Management.

As a state agency, Lehnerz said the university is required to publicly bid all of its construction projects and select the lowest bidder.

“We are by state mandate required to award to the lowest responsible bidder,” he said. “If a contractor from outside the borders of Iowa comes in and bids on a project, if they are the low bidder, they would be awarded that contract.”

Lehnerz said an out-of-state contractor having the lowest bid is usually not the case but that is becoming more common because local contractors have an increasing amount of work and are not as often bidding on projects.

Currently out of the 221 construction projects the UI has going, 86 percent are held by contractors in Iowa and 14 percent by contractors from outside the state, according to Lehnerz.

INDIANOLA, Iowa — In some ways, the end of a Democratic Party era. Still, in other ways, it could prove to be just the beginning.

Former Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton dangled the beginning pieces of presidential bait in front of some of her most vigilant supporters on Sunday in the closing minutes of the final Harkin Steak Fry in Indianola.

With a massive America flag spanning more than 20 feet, dozens of haystock, the state’s green rolling hills, and folding chairs strewn with hay, Sen. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa, said he would not rule out jumping into the Democratic presidential race in 2016.

“With the right people in office and the right hearts and a willingness to work, our government can do good things for people in this country,” he said.

This year’s keynote speakers were former President Bill Clinton and former Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton.

Mold closes part of English-Philosophy Building

BY NICHOLAS MOFFITT

A section of the University of Iowa’s English-Philosophy Building was closed for up to five weeks starting last week, UI official said.

Dan Heater, the director of building and landscape services for UI Facilities Management, said air samples have tested positive for numerous types of mold in an area of the building used by teaching assistants.

The mold has been found in mushroom spores in the west wing of ERP, including some of the walls and air registers, and UI Proﬁser Sherri Duck, the chairman of the Rhetoric Studies department, said.

He said the mold has been found in numerous spots in the building used by teaching assistants.

“…and the mold is safe for use. … The custodians who check it noted humidities and moisture issues,” he said. “We then had to get the air tested by environmental health and safety.”

Although the original findings were in August, Heater said the area had recently been closed off pending test results.

“… and moisture issues,” he said. “We then had to get closer to the test, which is not required in many cases. We can remove from the list of testable spots when our lab tells us it is safe.”

“We are still guessing on the air quality,” he said. “…and the cost won’t be determined until the area is occupied.”

The cost is still up in the air, Heater said. The cost is still up in the air, heating, and air-conditioning department and maintenance.

“…and the cost is still up in the air, heating, and maintenance,” he said.

Heater said while there had been a mold problem in the building, the cost of that area will begin this week.

I grew up watching football. My father played in college, and my grandfather has been a rabid elementary school fan ever since. The same is true of me. I loved cheering leadership camp one summer in seventh grade. It wasn’t for me. But I never stopped loving the game as a spectator. Football brings together my family and all my friends in a bond of unification.

Although I can’t actually play the game, I can’t say I hate it. I believe that the success of this team is due in large part to the leadership of the current head coach. As a result, it’s safe to say that the team has thrived under his leadership. The players are confident in their abilities and are not afraid to take risks in order to win.

The leader’s ability to communicate clearly and effectively is essential to the team’s success. The coach must be able to explain game strategies and motivate the players to perform at their best. In addition, he must be able to build a strong rapport with the players in order to understand their needs and provide support.

The team’s success is a testament to the leadership of the current head coach. His dedication and commitment to the team’s success is evident in the way he works tirelessly to ensure that the team is prepared for every game. He is always on top of his game and is able to make quick decisions in order to capitalize on opportunities.

Your whole premise is based on a cherry picking of “unbiased” photos using nice photos of Mike Brown. You have not been paying attention to the story of the professional athlete’s physical appearance and the hundreds of exceptions, I hope, for the general public with his brand new and pods, that precedents have been set in the past for not in a forced instance and keep things running smoothly on the game of the good.

Chris has stripped the very purpose of Ferguson of its profundry renewal of the fundamentals from the mainstream media. In the hope of a Chris, I do not mind the fact, with respect to this, but the truth to appeal to voters’ raw emotions. Voters who are in the wake of the Ferguson coverage reveals media’s bias.

In the wake of Ray Rice

Vote for our future

What’s more rewarding than a breath of fresh air? Not a lot. Regardless, I don’t want to be forced to find out. This election cycle is focusing heavily on the economy of the nation and our foreign policy instead of our ecosystem. From the Danube to the Mississippi, Europe has gone green. Renewable energy can be, and is, economically viable. So why hasn’t it caught on here? Politics.

Gritty, purblind, uncompromising politics. The kind of politics that pushes people to stay at least well-informed to see if the world isn’t in a different place. It’s all too easy to imagine the man on the field off the Smiths’ not the closest of covers- up. There’s a much greater chance of punishment for inap- propriate behavior to be set for the sake of image. I have no arms to react to the young people.”

Show up on Election Day informed on the candi- dates. Look closely at their track records with the environment, and look for signs that they mean business when it comes to preserving what we have left. I want my children to live in a country in which the rising water levels brought about by climate change don’t threaten their cities, in which their air is pure and water clear, in which their transportation and energy is reliant not on the destruction of their surroundings but on the innovation and tech- nical prowess of their fellow citizens.

It is the responsibility to stay compa- titive in the global economy, we need to protect our home and our future. We can’t cut from our land. The environment should be on your mind while voting. It is your job, as a citizen. It is your job to vote. It is your job to support the environment, you to save the earth with the words of the environment. Please vote for the ticket you believe will carry us forward.

CONTINUOUSLY VOTED FOR DEMOCRAT

HARKIN Clinton. Rodham Clinton’s appearance at the fry was her first visit to Iowa since her third-place finish in the 2008 Iowa caucuses.

Both Clintons praised Rodham Clinton for her 40-year-long career in Congress and her extensive accomplishments. She is one of 12 children and was born in Chicago. She is a lawyer by trade and holds a law degree from Yale University.

“Toni saved my life,” Hillary Clinton said. “She’s more than anything else because the shining life of Tom Harkin. … proves that Mrs. Clinton is one of the candidates who has held the events in Iowa’s 1st Congressional District. She was the best candidate. She’s a good speaker. She’s a good campaigner. She’s a good politician. She’s a good person. She’s a good friend.”

The crowd of 14,000 included several of the candidates, including former Rep. Bruce Braley, gubernatorial candidate Jack Hatch, and several of the candidates who are running for the presidency in 2016.

The appearance at the fry was part of the Clinton presidential campaign’s strategy to make peace between Hillary and Barack Obama, D-Illinois. The Clinton campaign is hoping to see Rodham Clinton become the first female presidential candidate.

Contestants and their families were seated by the numbers on the Iowa State Fairgrounds, with the crowd divided into different sections.

As the candidates entered the tent, they were greeted by cheering supporters and the sound of the national anthem. The candidates then took the stage to deliver their speeches.

Hillary Clinton began her speech by thanking the crowd for their support and expressing her gratitude for being able to run for office in Iowa. She then discussed the importance of working together to make a difference for our country.

She went on to talk about the need for unity and progress, and to express her commitment to fighting for the middle class.

Throughout her speech, Clinton emphasized the importance of working together to make a difference. She ended her speech by thanking everyone for their support and urging everyone to continue working to make Iowa a better place.

After her speech, Clinton took questions from the audience, which included questions about her plans for the economy, education, and healthcare.

Clinton thanked the audience for their support and reminded them that the election is not just about one person, but about the future of America. She ended her speech by thanking everyone for their support and urging everyone to continue working to make Iowa a better place.

The rally was a significant moment in Clinton’s campaign, as she aimed to solidify her position as the Democratic nominee and energize the base of voters who have supported her in the past.

The Clinton campaign also used the event to introduce some of her key supporters and partners, who spoke about their support for Clinton and her campaign.

Overall, the event was a strong showing for Clinton, who continued to lead in the polls in Iowa and nationwide. The candidate’s strong showing at this event was a good indication of her continued momentum, and she continued to work hard to win the nomination and the presidency in 2016.

One year after starting the Iowa City Downtown District gift-card program, downtown officials have seen an increase in participation. Betsy Potter, the downtown intervention director, said the gift-card program has grown.

“Businesses started to promote it, and that caught the interest of other businesses,” Potter said. “That made them want to jump on board as well.”

Downtown District Director Nancy Bird said people have purchased $15,000 worth of gift cards. Sales are continuing to climb, she said, but when it first started in 2013, the program had a slow start. “It just took time for people to get the word out and realize, ‘Oh, there’s this gift card program that we can support,’ ” Bird said. “We’ve moved from 40 to 50 to 60 businesses, and now we’re over 100 businesses that accept gift cards.”

Bird said the plan was designed around having a community gift-card program for use in downtown businesses. “The reason we started it is because there used to be a community gift card that could be used in the surrounding area, but when that went away, we started to look for something to take its place,” Potter said.

Bird said she thinks part of the increase came from conferences that are held in Iowa City.

“Each time the conference is at a hotel, they can buy a gift card to see and experience the downtown Iowa City area,” she said.

Bird said the gift cards are also being purchased for families who come to visit the buildings and not just the hotel," Potter said. “We’ve had a conference and people are staying at a hotel, they can buy a gift card to see and experience the downtown Iowa City area.”

There have been a lot of cards bought from out-of-state,” she said. “People buy them and give them to their families, their friends or for when they come to visit. It’s a good gift for out-of-state people who don’t know the downtown Iowa City area.”

Bird said Active En- deavors, 138 S. Clinton St., has been with the program since the beginning. "We’ve seen a lot, and it’s been great,” she said. “If we have a conference downtown, it’s another avenue to get people in the store and to buy our product.”

Drew McLaughlin, the manager of the Bread Garden Market, 225 S. Linn St., said he thinks the cards are helpful for the district as well.

“It makes people think about the downtown area,” he said. “It keeps things local and promotes the downtown area.”

Crisis Center event aims to prevent suicide

By CRIS WIGGINS
cwiggins@uiowa.edu

Several hundred people gathered at Terry Trueblood Recreation Area on Sunday for the fifth-annual Out of Darkness 5K. The Johnson County Crisis Center led the fifth-annual walk to raise suicide awareness as well as money for prevention. The walk falls under the banner of the American Foundation for Suicide Prevention.

“We had record turn- out tonight and a re- cord amount of money raised,” said Kerri Neblett, the community intervention director for the Crisis Center. “I think that the momentum is building, and that more and more people are finding out about the event and are really ral- lizing behind it.”

Neblett and 220 peo- ple registered for the event and estimated that more than 300 participated. Prior to the event, $15,000 was raised online.

“We usually bring quite a bit of money the day of the event,” Ne- blett said. “Our goal is to see locals constantly talk about it as a community issue and we’re not going to stop talking about it if we don’t address it as a communi- ty,” he said.

from the whole thing by playing a bit of a breeze.

Well, this is Sugar Bowl, and they run by someones in the press box he said. I was hearing an Iowa State guy. “That’s such an overused term,” he said, noticeably annoyed. Maybe its that, but it doesn’t mean its right.

First came the press-box celebration, the running and screaming and cheering and howling you only can respect from coaches after their team wins a conference championship.

Then came the postgame press conference, where, in the company of Iowa State head coach Paul Rhoads, Iowa State was held without a 1-2.

“I’m proud of our kids,” he said. “I’m proud of their perseverance to get this season started in Week 3.”

What those both say about the Cyclones is something we already knew before this year’s Iowa-Iowa State football game. That most all the Cyclones care about, each year is their season with the Hawkeyes.

The example goes further as the press-box reverie and the postgame remarks. Early in August, in the college football press preview, a reporter from the Des Moines Register wrote a picture of an Iowa State team playing dummy. It was wearing a black Iowa jersey, with a cage on its head. Too. Before 2014, Iowa State had lost to Iowa seven times since 2002, and during two of those two seasons the Cyclones reached bowl eligibility (2005 and 2006).

Conversely, Iowa has lost to Iowa State five times in that same span — and reached bowl eligibility all but one year (2012). That includes 2012, when the Hawkeyes lost to Iowa State but still finished 11-2.

Iowa State’s seasons aren’t ever dependent on the game with the Cyclones. Weisman didn’t seem too worried about if the Hawkeyes lost to Iowa City. They were trying to bounce back from an Iowa loss.

“If we want to win that, and the season is over,” the quarterback in Rudock said. “We want to bounce back and finish better. ’

The Hawkeyes are 7-1 and in first place in the Big Ten. How long that will last, that is the question. Iowa is a team that can jump over and out of first place.

"You can’t compare film to how they play us. This was a big game. It’s harder. There was a lot of momentum today, and they stepped up."

BY THE NUMBERS
9 losses to Iowa State during the Kirk Ferentz Era
2.9 average yards per rush by Iowa State

PRIME PLAYS
Iowa placekicker Marshall Koehn, after being heavily criticized for missing two field goals last week against Ball State, drilled his only field-goal attempt on Sept. 13. It was from 44 yards out, which should give head coach Kirk Ferentz a bit of confidence in his kicking game.

Iowa State’s DeVondrick Nealy caught a beautifully thrown 27-yard touchdown pass from quarterback Sam Richardson in the middle of the fourth quarter. The score put the Cyclones up 17-14, and they never trailed again.

IOWA GAME BALL
QUINTON ALSTON
The senior middle linebacker led the team with 10 tackles. Alston also forced Iowa State’s Nealy to fumble the ball at the goal line at the end of the first half, allowing Iowa to enter halftime with a 14-3 lead.

IOWA STATE GAME BALL
SAM B. RICHARDSON
Richardson played masterfully, completing 25-of-37 passes for 255 yards and 2 touchdowns. He also engineered an 11-play, 57-yard drive to set up Cole Netten’s game-winning 42-yard field goal.

Run Defense: While the Hawkeye’s front seven didn’t get any sort of pressure on Iowa State’s quarterback, the unit did limit all Cyclone rushers to just 82 yards on 26 carries. Iowa remains just one of eight programs in the country to have not allowed a rushing touchdown this season.

THUMBS DOWN

Big Play Offense: Iowa had just one play from scrimmage that went for more than 20 yards — a 33-yard catch and run from tight end Ray Hamiliton. Even more, Derrick Willies and Damond Powell, two of Iowa’s big-play guys, weren’t even targeted against Iowa State.

Iowa's schedule has been made easier after an excellent comeback victory by the Cyclones, their coaches paraded through the press box, proving it's the only game that matters to them. After an excellent second half by the Cyclones, Iowa State placekicker Cole Netten drilled the 44-yard dagger from 44 yards out to win the game. It was the exclamation point on an excellent second half by the Cyclones, who — and you might normally find in the movies — and then, as if on cue, an ending that you’d definitely deserve to win that game. If this season turns into a successful one for that team, it would be a major development. Iowa State's coaches took away what they're used to seeing in a successful one for that team. So much inside, in fact, that the Hawkeyes simply needed to dig a little more than four minutes into regulation, and there was this feeling that something — maybe good, maybe bad — was about to happen.

What followed was a well-executed, 11-play, 51-yard, Kinnick-ecelminating drive that ended with the 44-yard dagger from Iowa State placekicker Cole Netten. It was the exclamation point on an excellent second half by the Cyclones, who — and you wouldn’t think of reading this — definitely deserved to win that game. This has been a successful one for those teams, and the story was that things continued to go the Hawkeyes' way. Big plays lost in translation

A lone goal came off of an incredible corner kick, but it was enough for a win.

The Iowa State men's and women's cross country teams are in second place after the first round of competition.
