Five things to watch

Matt McGowan

Pregame Editor
matthew-r-mcgowan@uiowa.edu

1. Containing Braelon Allen

Iowa head coach Kirk Ferentz called Allen “a tremendous player” at his press conference on Tuesday, but his words might be an understatement of the Wisconsin running back’s talent. A third-year from Fond Du Lac, Wisconsin, Allen is perhaps the best rusher the Hawkeyes have faced this season, putting up 472 rushing yards and seven touchdowns to the tune of 6.5 yards per carry. The 2022 consensus All-Big Ten second-teamer is also a factor in the receiving game, catching 18 passes for 64 yards so far this season. According to Hawkeye defensive tackle Logan Lee, Allen has great contact balance and has the ability to break tackles, meaning that the Iowa “D” needs to be all-hands-on-deck in the run game.

With Badger backup RB Chez Mellusi out for the year with a fractured fibula, Allen will be the sole focal point of the Wisconsin offense. How he does against the Hawkeyes remains to be seen, but the Iowa defensive line and linebackers need to be at their best to prevent any explosive runs.

2. Improvement of Deacon Hill

The Black and Gold faithful got their first look at Hill as the starting quarterback, and his performance last Saturday wasn’t the best first impression. With multiple overthrows of receivers and a completion percentage of just 29 percent, Hill deemed his handywork “shaky.” Fortunately for Hill, the Hawkeye ground game cut him some slack by grinding out 181 rushing yards against Purdue.

Against the Badgers, who boast the 27th-ranked rushing defense in the nation, the Hawkeyes will need to rely on a more accurate passing game. Hill’s overthrows may have been inconsequential against Purdue, but Wisconsin’s secondary will make him pay. Badger cornerback Ricardo Hallman has four interceptions this season, tied for the best in the nation. Hallman, alongside safety Hunter Wohler, will pose threats downfield for Hill, who can’t turn the ball over in this critical matchup. As usual, winning the turnover battle is key.

3. Badgers’ new-look offense

While Wisconsin still prefers to run the ball overall, the Badgers have run a lot more 11 personnel than in recent years, lining up three wide receivers and a tight end along the line of scrimmage with just one running back in the backfield. Under center in this spread offense is Tanner Mordecai, who transferred from SMU over the offseason after throwing 33 touchdowns and 10 interceptions in a similar scheme.

In Wisconsin offensive coordinator Phil Longo’s unit, Mordecai has completed 64 percent of his passes but has a 1-1 touchdown-interception ratio. While the Hawkeyes need to be geared up for Allen in the run game, they also need to be cognizant of the Badgers distributing the ball around. How Iowa defensive coordinator Phil Parker balances defending the run and pass will be crucial in helping the Hawkeyes get stops against a team that averages 31 points per game. If anything, honing in on the run would be a better strategy, as the Hawkeye secondary can make the plays needed to stop the big gains.

4. Tanner Mordecai’s mobility

Saturday will also be when Iowa takes on perhaps the most mobile quarterback they’ve seen this season. Mordecai has kept the ball himself 47 times this season, eating up 153 yards and visiting the end zone four times. With a long of just 18 yards, Mordecai does his best work in the red zone. The Hawkeyes will need to keep good eyes, have patience with zone-read options, and keep Mordecai within the pocket. While Iowa’s defensive line had a field day last week with six sacks, getting to Mordecai will be difficult against a physical Wisconsin front five that’s given up eight sacks all season. Iowa linebackers Jay Higgins and Nick Jackson will need to keep an eye out for Mordecai scrambles, especially on third down.

5. Iowa receiving corps

For the past three games, the Hawkeye wideouts have been practically extinct on the stat sheet, collecting eight receptions in 12 quarters of football. Ferentz said there have been no issues with keeping the position group engaged, but it’s up to offensive coordinator Brian Ferentz to design effective plays that space out receivers and get them open. Running the ball as often as the Hawkeyes did in the second half against the Boilermakers will be too predictable against the Badgers. A balanced offense won’t allow an opponent to plan ahead. Winning does mask a lot of issues, but the Hawkeyes won’t stay competitive in Madison without getting the receivers involved.

IOWA -10
When an underdog features a run-heavy offense, it makes it more difficult for the double-digit favorite to pull away and actually cover. Iowa has run the ball on over 56% of its plays and ranks 89th in seconds per play at 28.4. Those triple option-esque splits are exactly what I'm looking for.

UNDER 36.5

Another week, another under for the Hawkeyes. Deacon Hill has yet to prove that he can effectively carry this Iowa offense, as the Hawkeyes put up a Success Rate in the fourth percentile last week. I could see the Badgers struggle to sustain drives as well, ranking 80th in Quality Drives on offense.

IOWA -10
While I believe this Badger squad is way better than last year's edition, the Hawkeyes shouldn't be double-digit underdogs. Even though both teams may try to spread the ball around, they'll ultimately succumb to running the ball, which will drain the clock and prevent a large lead.

UNDER 36.5

I really don't know why sportsbooks still put a line out for the Iowa game total, as they only lose money when any fan with a brain picks the under and comes away with cash. The last three match-up totals have all been under 36 points. Plus, early forecasts call for rain before kickoff.

Iowa's Deacon Hill shows loyal leadership

The quarterback values trusting in others but also has confidence in himself.

While others were still learning to swim, Iowa quarterback Deacon Hill was learning to score.

Hill, 4 years old and growing up in Santa Barbara, California, wasn't on the football field, but rather in the local swimming pool playing in his first water polo game. With three older sisters who participated in the sport, the choice was a natural one for Hill, who said he learned to swim at age 2. That decision paid off in the future.

For Hill, his days playing water polo helped him develop what many call a "cannon" for a right arm.

"The thing is with water polo, if you throw the ball hard enough, you shouldn't be able to block it," he said.

This throwing capability is what turned coaches' heads before Hill was even a starter at Santa Barbara High School.

Recognized by most for his arm strength and 6-foot-3, 258 pound frame, Hill's athleticism jumps off the page.

While he may not look like a prototypical quarterback, Hill's love for the position set him on a track from the beaches of California to the plains of the Midwest, where he is now the starting quarterback for Iowa football with only 35 passing attempts under his belt. Along the way, Hill was guided by many, and the quarterback has become a confident leader who trusts others.

Surrounded by athletes

The Hill household isn't lacking in athletic talent.

Hill's father, Pe'a, was a standout offensive lineman at Fresno City College before playing on BYU-Hawaii's basketball team and eventually representing the Polynesian national men's basketball team. The quarterback's mother, Cindy, earned all-conference and All-American honors her senior season as a basketball player at BYU, averaging 22.2 points, 8.7 rebounds, and 5.6 assists.

Those genes were passed down to Hill's elder sisters, Sami, Kodi, and Abbi, each of whom went to UCLA for water polo. The oldest, Sami, even played goalie at the 2016 Summer Olympics in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, winning gold for the United States.

Hill explained how growing up in this environment provided him plenty of advice that he could emulate in his own life and athletic career.

"This definitely helps me now [at Iowa], because now I can piece together what everybody in the building says and see what will help me and what I can take and put into my own game," he said.

Hill's first experience playing tackle football started in fourth grade, but that trek was quickly cut short. Since the league Hill competed in divided players based on height and weight instead of age, Hill found himself lining up against players two or three years his senior.

"My parents ended up pulling me halfway through the year, because there were some teams with some ginormous dudes, and [my parents were] like, 'You're going to get killed,'" Hill remembered.

After resorting to flag football for the rest of the year, Hill joined his age group in pads the following season. The sophomore said he was often teased about playing quarterback at his size, but his determination to start under center never wavered. Such was apparent to J.T. Stone, the then-varsity coach at Santa Barbara who first started working with Hill in fourth grade.

"My first impression of him was, 'Who's this big kid trying to play quarterback?'" Stone told The Daily Iowan. "So that threw me off, but he was an attractive kid in regards to his size ... I first thought of [former Pittsburgh Steelers quarterback] Ben Roethlisberger. The kid wanted to play quarterback, he had a work ethic, and we got after it."

One of Stone's early critiques of Hill was his throwing motion being too akin to a water polo throw. According to Hill, the difference between the respective mechanics is found in the wrist. In water polo, the wrist directs where the ball is thrown, whereas in football the wrist needs to just flick forward.

While crediting water polo for keeping Hill in shape, Stone described how Hill's release point on his throw was too high. By his sophomore year of high school, Hill had given up his "first love" and concentrated his efforts on football.

Power of loyalty

Hill made his debut for the Dons' junior varsity team in 2017, tossing 38 touchdowns in just 10 games. The following season, the quarterback was promoted to the varsity squad, but, similar to Iowa teammate Cade McNamara, didn't earn the starting job right away.

Slotted in front of Hill was senior Frankie Gamberdella, who had held the job for the past two seasons. While Deacon did get in a few reps early in the season, his time to start came when Gamberdella suffered a season-ending injury.

With Hill at the helm, the Dons advanced to playoffs, clinching their spot in the postseason with a victory over crosstown rival Dos Pueblos.

In that game, Hill completed 70 percent of his passes for 199 yards and three scores.

"Deacon was calm, cool, and collected; it was just another game," Stone said. "That's what I loved about him. He made my life easy."

That summer, Sam Fisher, who was training Hill as a private QB coach, got in contact with then-Wisconsin quarterbacks coach Jon Budmayr, who would eventually join Iowa's coaching staff at the start of last season. Hill went on an official visit to Madison, and on June 25, 2019 committed to the Badgers before becoming the full-time starter in high school.

"That was surreal," Hill said of the experience. "I guess [Budmayr] saw something in me when I was young. I wouldn't trade it for the world. I wouldn't trade our relationship for the world, we're very tight."

From an area that Stone referred to as the "black hole" for Division I football players, Hill was an exception. United with Budmayr in Wisconsin, the quarterback redshirted in 2021, but found himself on the bench behind Badger starter Graham Mertz the following year.

Wearing the headset in 2022, Hill appeared in just one game but did not throw a pass. Even though he did not see the field much during his time in Madison, Hill still found the experience valuable.

"I think the biggest thing was I matured as a person," Hill explained. "Learning to deal with ups and downs within my career and not trying to let that affect my life outside of football. I think there's a genuine balance between life and football ... If football's not going that well you can find peace in life and on the alternative side, if things aren't going great in life, you can find peace in football."

When longtime Badger head coach Paul Chryst was fired on Oct. 2, 2022, Hill entered the transfer portal just week later. After a few months in the portal, Hill committed to Fordham, an FCS school in New York. According to Hill, just five days after he announced his intention to play for the Rams, he got a phone call from Iowa offensive coordinator Brian Ferentz.

After discussing the matter with his parents and family, Hill decommitted from Fordham and signed on with the Hawkeyes on Dec. 25 2022, citing the close-knit relationship with Budmayr as a main factor.

"Loyalty is a big thing for me. I was very loyal to him and wanted to play for him," Hill said of Budmayr, who gave the quarterback his first collegiate offer. "Him having that belief in me was the biggest thing in the world to me."

Swapping out the dairy farms of Wisconsin for the cornfields of Iowa, Hill found more

Ayrton Breckenridge | The Daily Iowan

Iowa quarterback Deacon Hill answers questions from the media after a football game between Iowa and Michigan State at Kinnick Stadium on Sept. 30. The Hawkeyes defeated the Spartans, 26-16.

people who believed in him, and the quarterback made sure to return such conviction.

Impressing at Iowa

Similar to the reactions he received as a youth, Hill's arrival in Iowa City brought along plenty of dubious questions from his teammates, such as Hawkeye kicker Drew Stevens.

"I'm not going to lie, my first impression was, like, 'Gosh, is this a lineman, or is this a quarterback?'" Stevens recalled. "But when I saw him throw, I was like, 'Yeah, I'd have that guy as my quarterback.'"

According to the quarterback, he can throw up to 73 yards in the air, but Iowa running back Leshon Williams has a more simple way of putting it.

"I don't think a receiver can outrun Deacon's arm," Williams said.

Hill's athletic ability isn't limited to the gridiron, as the prep basketball player is also an avid surfer. Last summer, Hill flew from Wisconsin to Texas to California. At 5:30 a.m. the following morning, he traded the runway for the beach, hitting the waves in Malibu with his best friend.

Stevens said no one on the Hawkeye team can outdrive Hill on the golf course. The quarterback tends to slice the ball, but the kicker said he places 'banana-shaped' drives on the fairway every time.

For Hill, working with McNamara, as well as former Hawkeye quarterback Spencer Petras and Hawkeye analyst Keller Chryst, a former graduate assistant coach at Wisconsin, has been "an absolute blessing." When McNamara missed two weeks of fall camp with a quad injury, Hill got to take reps with the first team in practice.

Hill explained how those two weeks were critical for him to build chemistry with center Logan Jones as well as his receivers. After only throwing eight passes in mop-up duty, Hill's preseason experience was put to the test just five weeks into the season, when McNamara was injured in the first quarter in the Hawkeyes' game against Michigan State.

Just like back in high school, Hill's oppor-

"I don't think a receiver can outrun Deacon's arm."

Leshon Williams
Iowa running back

tunity for Iowa arrived in the event of a season-ending injury to the starter. While admitting that it's never ideal for McNamara to be sidelined, he's embracing his chance. All it took was a little contact for him to get comfortable.

On Hill's first play from scrimmage following McNamara's exit, the Hawkeyes resorted to a play Iowa head coach Kirk Ferentz was waiting all season to implement — the QB sneak.

"He's going to be a challenge to tackle, it's going to take more than just sticking your hand out there," Ferentz said.

Stone said Hill has been practicing the play since he was young, taking each rep with the goal of reaching back to the line of scrimmage, which is what the quarterback did in his first snap against the Spartans.

Yet on occasion, the line of scrimmage is the just the beginning of a longer, majestic run for Hill, who led Santa Barbara to the state championship game his senior season. During the contest, Hill kept the ball on a counter run and dashed 60 yards to the end zone for the go-ahead score.

Now that once was a possibility is a reality, Hill has only stepped up his duties. Hill said he is throwing 30 to 40 balls to wideout Diante Vines after each practice the week heading into his first official start against Purdue.

Just as he has conviction in Budmayr and the rest of the Hawkeye coaching staff, Hill also has "100 percent trust" in his receivers, despite them dropping six passes against Michigan State.

"I think in basketball, when a shooter is missing, you don't tell him to stop shooting, you tell him to keep shooting," Hill said. "I'm going to keep throwing them the ball no matter what because they're my guys."

For Stone, Hill has belief in himself, but not one that is egotistical. Instead, the quarterback is confident in his improvement, knowing he is always a "student of the game" and can never stop learning. After the Hawkeyes' victory over the Spartans, Hill and Stone texted each other and discussed lessons taken away from Michigan State's defensive concepts.

After McNamara left the game due to injury, Jones told Hill that he and everyone on the team believed in what he could do, and Hill took those words to heart. According to Jones, Hill had a simple message for his teammates in the huddle — "Let's get this done."

Against Michigan State, Hill completed 40 percent of his passes for 115 yards and a touchdown. In his first-career collegiate start against Purdue the following week, the quarterback's completion percentage dipped to 29 percent and his total quarterback rating (QBR) dropped 20 points.

After the game against the Boilermakers, Hill said he was a bit "jittery" at the outset, tossing multiple overthrows. Ferentz affirmed he would remain the starter, adding that any change would be "silly."

Heading into a pivotal matchup against Wisconsin this week, one would think Hill would be looking for revenge, or to at least make a statement that the 'Deac Show' has finally arrived. Yet for the quarterback thrust into the spotlight, Hill doesn't let it consume him.

"I'm not too worried with what I want," Hill said. "I'm just concerned with what the team needs and what the coaches need from me."

The Daily Iowan: First, what would be the first thing you would do if you won the lottery?

Even if I had a lot of money, I wouldn't even know what to do with it ... so I'll say the first thing I'd do is probably buy a house. I don't know how big — not too small. I'm a family man, so I'd like to have my family [at] a big house where everyone can come to.

Do you have a specific dream destination you'd want the house to be in?

I want to be somewhere by a beach. That would be really nice, some nice weather and warm weather.

When you go to the beach, what do you like to do? Are you in the water?

We're just vibing out there, for real. It'd be cool to be out there for one or two days by myself. Like I said, who I'm with really matters.

And when you're not with your family or friends, what do you like to do?

I'm always just laid back. [I'd like to] watch a movie.

Do you have a favorite movie genre?

I like those mafia-mobster movies. Those were my favorites, like Goodfellas. I mean, I watch a lot of movies. Those are probably the ones that come to mind.

Do you have any football pet peeves?

I mean, I'm the type of person who sweats a lot — too much, especially when there's hot weather. When you sweat too much, it seeps through your gloves. [I] can't catch the ball. Everything's just wet. You try to dry your hands, and your towel is wet.

And you said you watch a ton of movies. If someone could play you in a movie, who would you pick?

Mario Lopez. He looks like me.

And how would you want your character personality-wise?

Just a laid back, funny guy.

Do you have a piece of advice or motto you live by?

I don't try to take life too seriously. We're all going to die at one point, and this life's not going to last forever, so I just try to enjoy it. [I] enjoy it for what I can [and don't] take anything too seriously.

I assume that you plan to play football as long as you can. When you're done playing football, do you have any bucket list items, places you want to go, or things you want to do?

Yeah, I definitely want to travel a lot to a lot of tropical areas, to be honest. Beach areas, the Bahamas, I might end up living somewhere out there.

You had your breakthrough last season. How do you think that can translate over this year?

Just playing my role, just like anyone else on the team. I want to do my job.

BIG Game Guide

Cooper Worth
Football Reporter

INDIANA @ MICHIGAN

Saturday | 11 a.m. | FOX

Indiana (2-3, 0-2)
No. 2 Michigan (6-0, 3-0)

Michigan Stadium
Ann Arbor, MI

Maybe last week's bye will help the Hoosiers against the Wolverines, but most likely not. Big Noon Saturday needs to be avoided the Big Ten like the plague.

Line: Michigan -34 | O/U: 47.5

MICHIGAN STATE @ RUTGERS

Saturday | 11 a.m. | BIG NETWORK

Michigan State (2-3, 0-2)
Rutgers (4-2, 1-2)

SHI Stadium
Piscataway, NJ

Bouncing back after a tough loss would help the Spartans tremendously. Fun fact: the East Jersey Old Time Village has a higher rating on Google than SHI Stadium.

Line: Rutgers -5.5 | O/U: 40.5

ILLINOIS @ MARYLAND

Saturday | 2:30 p.m. | NBC

Illinois (2-4, 0-3)
Maryland (5-1, 2-1)

SECU Stadium
College Park, MD

The Illini should be no problem for the Terrapins. Illinois will be shelled by at least 20 points in this one. Why this is on national TV is beyond me.

Line: Maryland -14.5 | O/U: 51.5

OHIO STATE @ PURDUE

Saturday | 11 a.m. | peacock

No. 3 Ohio State (5-0, 2-0)
Purdue (2-4, 1-2)

Ross-Ade Stadium
West Lafayette, IN

I think the Buckeyes' defensive line will get to Boilermaker QB Hudson Card ad nauseam. He's no ace, and will be folded by halftime. Best of luck.

Line: Ohio State -19.5 | O/U: 50.5

MASSACHUSETTS @ PENN STATE

Saturday | 2:30 p.m. | BIG NETWORK

Massachusetts (1-6)
No. 6 Penn State (5-0, 3-0)

Beaver Stadium
University Park, PA

The year 1776 was last time the Minutemen were this much of an underdog. Nevertheless, this contest will be a Boston Massacre.

Line: Penn State -42.5 | O/U: 57.5

IOWA @ WISCONSIN

Saturday | 3 p.m. | FOX

Iowa (5-1, 2-1)
Wisconsin (4-1, 2-0)

Camp Randall Stadium
Madison, WI

Wisconsin hasn't played a defense quite like Iowa's this season, but it won't matter if the Hawkeyes' QB misses as bad as he did last week.

Line: Wisconsin -10 | O/U: 36.5

WEEK SEVEN

Power Rankings

1. Michigan

The Wolverines' defense is too good.

2. Penn State

It could probably sit its starters this week.

3. Ohio State

O-line needs to bounce back after a shaky performance last week.

4. Wisconsin

The Badgers have been improving every week since that loss to Washington State.

5. Iowa

The return of Kaleb Johnson was huge for the Hawkeye offense.

6. Maryland

Playing Ohio State close is good for morale.

7. Rutgers

The Scarlet Knights had opportunities against the Badgers last week.

8. Minnesota

The Golden Gophers needed a break this week. They'll need it for Iowa.

9. Nebraska

Two touchdowns in 10 seconds is crazy.

10. Michigan State

It seems Spartan fans have seen enough of QB Noah Kim.

11. Purdue

The offense showed flashes against a tough Iowa defense.

12. Illinois

Twenty-one total rushing yards aren't winning any games.

13. Indiana

Hoosier fans had a nice break from suffering last week.

14. Northwestern

Shoutout to No. 15 on the offense for the Wildcats. Does he know Megatron?

	WISCONSIN Madison blows, but it will be a House of Pain for the Hawkeyes.	IOWA Big Deac energy.	IOWA I will never pick the Wisconsin Badgers to win a football game.	WISCONSIN The return to Madison might be too much for Deac.	WISCONSIN Iowa limped to 20 points against a bad Purdue defense.	WISCONSIN Still, Cooper DeJean will get an interception for a touchdown.	IOWA Badgers? We don't need no stinkin' Badgers.
	WASHINGTON "Face me!!!" - Random of citizen of Seattle when I visited.	OREGON A clash of future Big Ten squads.	OREGON One last matchup before the two succumb to "run the ball and punt."	OREGON The Ducks are the better overall team.	OREGON The Ducks' defense will be a difference maker in this one.	WASHINGTON Winner gets the Big Ten West title.	WASHINGTON This might set a Big Ten scoring record.
	NORTH CAROLINA A fresh-out-the-club Michael Irvin could coach better.	NORTH CAROLINA Miami should've kept the turnover chain.	MIAMI The Hurricanes have trouble bending the knee to opponents.	NORTH CAROLINA What was Miami thinking last week?	MIAMI I'd bet the house they kneel it out if they're up late again.	NORTH CAROLINA At least the Canes won't have to worry about the Victory Formation.	NORTH CAROLINA Miami takes a knee in the final seconds. Tough way to lose.
	USC It's OK, Ryan Day. Lou Holtz triggers me too. Plus, "Rudy" stinks.	USC Must-win game for both teams.	USC Caleb Williams will equal Stetson Bennett until he choses the NFL.	USC A lot of questions for both teams heading into this game.	USC I don't care if I'm right about this one, I'm just not picking ND again.	USC If only this would be a Big Ten game next season ...	USC If Caleb Williams wants to prove himself, then he should go to Iowa.
	OREGON STATE Former Bruin Zach LaVine cannot be trusted in the clutch.	OREGON STATE Beaver fever.	OREGON STATE Go Beavers, future Mountain West champions.	OREGON STATE Give me the Beavers at home.	OREGON STATE Who's going to adopt the PAC-2?	OREGON STATE Another oddly fun PAC-12 game.	OREGON STATE The PAC-12 is going out with a bang.
	BUFFALO I once picked up a 4-7-10 split. Please clap.	BUFFALO Bowling Green's colors being orange and brown throws me off.	BOWLING GREEN Who picks these games?	BUFFALO The Griselda Records fan in me has to go with the Bulls.	BUFFALO Make it three in a row for the Bulls.	BUFFALO A lot of bad in this game.	BUFFALO Bowling Green is not the birthplace of a popular game day snack.

KID CAPTAIN

Madison Ramirez radiates positivity

The 17-year-old Iowa football Kid Captain finds peace through cheerleading and music.

Kenna Roering

Sports Editor

mckenna-roering@uiowa.edu

Madison Ramirez's selection as Kid Captain for Iowa football's game against Wisconsin made perfect sense.

Not only will the game be played in Madison, Wisconsin, but the Badgers are sponsored by her favorite restaurant, Culver's.

Wisconsin Athletic Director Chris McIntosh gifted Ramirez's diagnosed with spinal muscular atrophy (SMA), a genetic condition that weakens muscles and causes problems with movement.

Megan was told there was no cure for SMA and that her daughter would probably use a wheelchair her whole life.

Megan said the news was devastating to hear, but knew her family had to make the best out of her daughter's life.

She said when her daughter started kindergarten at 5 years old,

"She's so positive, and she always thinks she can do everything. She never gets down and upset."

Megan Ramirez

Madison Ramirez's mother

family tickets to Saturday's game at Camp Randall Stadium. The 17-year-old will watch the game in her Hawkeye jersey with a big gold bow in her hair.

The bow is a perfect accessory to Ramirez's bright and positive personality.

"She's so positive, and she always thinks she can do everything," her mother, Megan, said. "She never gets down and upset."

Ramirez, from LeClaire, Iowa, was born about 10 weeks premature. Doctors told Megan and her husband, Tom, that their daughter's development would be delayed until she was around 2 years old.

But when Ramirez turned 2 years old, she still hadn't hit the developmental milestones doctors expected.

Doctors searched for other possible neurological conditions, and Ramirez was diagnosed with cerebral palsy, which was later discovered to be a misdiagnosis as her family kept looking for answers.

When Ramirez was about 2-and-a-half years old, she went through genetic testing and was accurately she didn't use her wheelchair much and could walk around her whole classroom.

There was a hope that Ramirez would defy all odds, but toward the end of elementary school, she started regressing and getting weaker.

When she was 11, Ramirez started having seizures "out of nowhere."

Megan took her to the University of Iowa emergency room for genetic testing because local doctors weren't finding anything.

The UI came back with another genetic diagnosis: Dup15q Syndrome, the reason for her sudden seizures.

"She lost a lot of brain function," Megan said. "At that time, she lost all of her mobility. She could no longer crawl because of her seizures."

During this time, the first treatment for SMA was released. Ramirez receives a needle injection into her spine every four months.

In 2020, a second SMA treatment was released, this time an oral drug.

"She's actually gotten even a little bit stronger," Megan said of Ramirez since she started taking the oral medication. "So she still will probably never walk but is able to crawl across the room, is able to feed herself, and can maintain her day at school and things like that."

Health care professionals at the UI eventually found a combination of medications that have kept Ramirez seizure-free for 2.5 years.

Ramirez finds happiness in reading, swimming, and cheerleading for the Pleasant Valley Sparkles.

When she's not preoccupied with those passions, Ramirez loves listening to music.

Her musical interest comes from her father, who plays the drums in an AC/DC cover band.

"I recently took her to a show,

Madison Ramirez's favorites:

Food: Culver's

Color: Pink or purple

Animal: Dog

Vacation spot: Going to SMA conferences every year

Team: Iowa

Player: Caitlin Clark or Tory Taylor

and this big, 350-pound, 6-foot-4, Harley [Davidson] dude came over to me crying and told me how much it touched him to watch her rocking out and loving the music," Megan said.

Now, Ramirez visits the UI about three times a month for checkups.

Kathy Matthews, a UI pediatric neurologist, said Ramirez is on treatment now for her SMA medication.

"The nicest thing is that we can talk about improvements rather than just talking about losing skills," Matthews said. "The Kid Captain thing is a very nice sports-related honor for her. I was so happy about that."
